Introduction

During the summer 2012 exam series, over 5.9 million GCSE and more than 2.4 million A level (AS and A level) certifications were made in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

If a school or college is concerned about a candidate’s grade, it can ask the awarding organisation to investigate the grade through the enquiries about results process.

Following the release of results for the summer 2012 exam series there were 279,046 enquiries about results. This is in the context of over 21 million unit entries for exams and internal assessments in 2012. For A level, there were a total of 14,120 subject grade changes following enquiries about results, and for GCSE a total of 31,510 subject grade changes. Together, A level and GCSE grade changes represented 0.54 per cent of all subject certifications.

If a school or college is dissatisfied with the outcome of an enquiry about result, it can appeal to the awarding organisation. An appeal can be in relation to one or more candidates’ grades. Two post-results stages are available for appeals:

Stage 1: review by senior member of the awarding organisation

Following the summer 2012 exam series there were 493 stage 1 appeals made. This compares with 401 appeals in 2011 and represents an increase of 23 per cent. There were 61 appeals that resulted in changes to candidates’ grades at stage 1, compared with 34 in 2011.

Stage 2: appeals panel

A school or college may progress an appeal to stage 2 if it is still dissatisfied with the outcome after stage 1. Of the 493 stage 1 appeals following the summer 2012 exam series, 41 progressed to a stage 2 appeal. This compares with 40 in 2011. One of the 41 stage 2 appeals resulted in grade changes in 2012, compared with six in 2011.

In 2012, the majority of appeals were dealt with at stage 1, with 8 per cent progressing to stage 2. This maintains the trend of the previous five years.
This statistical bulletin, published by the qualifications regulators in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, presents data on appeals made to awarding organisations for the summer 2012 GCSE and A level exam series. The bulletin summarises the performance of the six awarding organisations offering these qualifications in England, Wales and Northern Ireland:

- Assessment and Qualifications Alliance (AQA)
- Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (Northern Ireland) (CCEA)
- Edexcel
- International Curriculum & Assessment Agency (Examinations) ICAA(E)
- Oxford Cambridge and RSA Examinations (OCR)
- WJEC.

The awarding organisations provide the qualifications regulators – Ofqual, the Welsh Government and the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) – with statistical data on appeals.

This bulletin:

- details the processes and 2012 reporting arrangements for appeals;
- gives data for the six awarding organisations in terms of the two stages for appeals;
- gives data on the number of appeals received, the number resulting in subject grade changes and the performance of the awarding organisations in meeting agreed timelines.

Once published, we may revise data in subsequent bulletins. In this bulletin some historical figures have been revised since last year’s bulletin.

Data source

The data are provided by the awarding organisations. The awarding organisations and the qualifications regulators have a formal and agreed schedule for reporting on enquiries about results and appeals, which was introduced in 2003.
The post-results process

Enquiries about results

Every year, the GCSE and A level awarding organisations publish information and guidance for schools and colleges on making use of the post-results services following exams and the issue of results.

Awarding organisations issue the results of summer exams in August. If a school or college is concerned about a candidate’s grade, it can make an enquiry about the result to the awarding organisation, which will then review the accuracy of the grade. Candidates can’t make an enquiry about a result directly; they must ask through their school or college. This is because schools and colleges have responsibility for entering candidates for exams. Private candidates are an exception; they can ask the awarding organisations directly.

If the review of the result shows that marking or processing errors have been made and the candidate’s grade is incorrect, the awarding organisation will change the result up or down, as appropriate.

A bulletin called Enquiries about Results for GCSE and A level: Summer 2012 Exam Series was published in December 2012 and is available at: www.ofqual.gov.uk/standards/statistics/enquiries-about-results.

Appeals

If a school or college has gone through the enquiries about results process and is dissatisfied with the outcome, it can appeal to the awarding organisation. An appeal can be in relation to one or more candidates’ grades, if they are all thought to be impacted by the same issue.

A school or college must make an appeal within 14 days of receiving the outcome of the enquiry about results.

There are two stages in the appeals process:

- Stage 1 is a review of the case by a senior member of the awarding organisation who has not been involved previously with the particular case.
- Stage 2 is a presentation of the case to an appeals panel. The awarding organisation convenes the panel. It will comprise at least three members, one of whom must be independent (that means someone who is not, and has not been, a member of the awarding organisation’s board or committees, or an employee or examiner at the awarding organisation, at any time during the previous five years). A school or college can take the appeal to stage 2 only after going through stage 1.
Both stages should usually be completed within 50 working days of the appeal being lodged with the awarding organisation, with agreement of both parties. In some cases appeals are not resolved until after 50 days from the initial receipt of the appeal, to allow a fair appeal hearing with appropriate evidence and individuals present from both the school or college and the awarding organisation.

Our Examination Procedures Review Service

If a school or college is dissatisfied with the outcome of the stage 2 appeal, it can apply to our Examination Procedures Review Service. The Examination Procedures Review Service is one of our teams and has taken over the work previously carried out by the Examinations Appeals Board.

We will review each application and arrange a review hearing for it, if appropriate. We will look at whether the awarding organisation has followed the right procedures and whether it has used them properly and fairly. Where we think there is a solid case and we are not confident the published results are appropriate, we will ask the awarding organisation to reconsider the case. Otherwise, we will uphold the original decision of the awarding organisation. We might appoint an observer to monitor the reconsideration of a case. Where appropriate, we can offer wider recommendations to awarding organisations or other regulatory authorities.

Summer 2012 exam series

During the summer 2012 exam series, there were over 5.9 million GCSE and more than 2.4 million A level (AS and A level) certifications. At unit level, there were 15.7 million GCSE unit entries and 5.5 million A level (AS and A level) unit entries (see table 1 and figure 1.)

Following the summer 2012 exam series, appeals were received for the two qualification types as shown below:

</tbody>
</table>

The number of appeals is a very small proportion of the 8.4 million certifications and the 21.1 million entries from the summer exam series.
Stage 1 and stage 2 appeals

(See tables 2, 3 and 4, and figure 2.)

There were 493 stage 1 appeals made against GCSE and A level results, an increase of 23 per cent from 2011, when there were 401. Of the 493 stage 1 appeals, 112 (23 per cent) were upheld by the awarding organisations. This compares with 71 (18 per cent) upheld appeals in 2011.

Sixty-two appeals resulted in changes to candidates’ grades: 61 of which went up and one which went down. This compares with a total of 40 in 2011. Changes to grades are at unit level and may or may not impact the overall qualification grade.

An appeal can be in relation to one or more candidates’ grades. The 493 stage 1 appeal cases from the summer 2012 exam series involved challenges to 6,158 unit grades and resulted in a total of 151 candidate qualification grade changes. This compares with 6,680 unit grade challenges in 2011 and 135 candidate qualification grade changes, as shown below:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

<td>135</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

Note: Data at candidate level were collected for the first time in 2012, with figures for 2011 obtained for comparison.

Of the stage 1 appeals, 41 progressed to stage 2: one more than in 2011. The majority of appeals were dealt with at stage 1, with just 8 per cent progressing to stage 2, maintaining the trend of the previous five years.

Seven of the stage 2 appeals were upheld in 2012, one of which resulted in an upward change to a candidate’s qualification grade. This compares with six stage 2 appeals upheld in 2011, with four qualification grade changes.

All stage 1 appeals have been completed. There were 11 stage 2 appeals that were not completed within the target timeline of 50 days from the initial receipt of the appeal. At the time of writing, five stage 2 appeals were still in progress.
The number of appeals received and those resulting in grade changes have increased from 2012, and this continues the upward trend over the last three years.

However, when looking across the last five years, the number of appeals received for A level has reduced, while GCSE has seen an increase. The majority of GCSEs are now unitised, which has led to an increase in the number of unit entries. This may be a factor in the increase of appeals received for GCSE.
