Case study

- There is an election for President every five years.
- Only people over the age of 18 may vote in the elections.
- You cannot stand for election if you have been convicted of a crime.
- People can watch what happens in parliament because all debates are broadcast on television.
- The police are caught on camera beating up a known criminal. The criminal had not been resisting arrest and had not tried to run away when stopped.
- Once a year the President must answer questions in parliament about his/her plans for running the country.
- There are over five different political parties.
- It is illegal to discriminate against people from different religious or ethnic backgrounds.
- It is difficult for older people or people with disabilities to get good jobs.
- There is a youth parliament where young people can debate ideas but the politicians do not have to act on their suggestions.
- Human Rights groups in the country are concerned that the President does not take human rights seriously.

Read the case study carefully and decide how democratic the country appears to be. Rate each of the statements below by circling the number which you think best describes the country in the case study.

1 = poor

2 = OK (but there are some problems)

3 = very good
